Questions and Answer on Shabbat XIV

Is it allowed to tape a TV show over Shabbat or Yom Tov?

Setting a timer on Friday so that a prohibited act will occur automatically on Shabbat seems at first glance to be very similar to the well-established Halachic rule that "it is permitted to start an action on Friday near sunset even though the work cannot be completed on Friday and can only be finished on Shabbat."

Indeed, Rabbi Yosef Karo in the Code of Jewish Law rules that it is permitted to place wheat in a self-grinding water mill on Friday. Rabbi Isserles, however, adds: "There are authorities who prohibit placing wheat in the mill on Friday. We [Ashkenazic Jewry] should worry about the prohibition of creating sound. This is the proper approach from the outset (lechatchilah). In cases of financial loss, it is permitted to be lenient."

Based on this stringency of the Rama, Rabbi Moshe Feinstein and Rabbi Shlomo Zalman Auerbach agree that this rule prohibits one from playing a radio or Television on Shabbat even if it is left on for all of Shabbat. Placing a radio on a timer is analogous to putting wheat into a water mill. Both cause noise on Shabbat and arouse suspicion that its owner has violated the laws of Shabbat. Hence, they rule that it is prohibited to set a radio on a timer or to let it run the entire Shabbat. However, it seems that this ruling does not apply to taping a program on a recorder or a video recorder on Shabbat when the television is left off, since that would not create any sound or image and would not cause a disruption of Shabbat.

Is it permitted to clap my hands to a song or applaud someone on Shabbat?

The Mishnah expressly says that it is forbidden to clap on Shabbat or Yom Tov because it might bring someone to make a musical instrument, which is a forbidden act. However, it is common practice by to clap hands when singing on Shabbat or Yom Tov.

There are two explanations given for this custom:

1. This prohibition applied in Talmudic times, when many people were proficient in making musical instruments. Today, however, there are very few people who know how to assemble an instrument, so there is no reason to prohibit clapping.
2. This prohibition does not apply when the clapping is done for the purpose of a Mitzvah. Therefore, it is permitted to clap on Shabbat, thus serving G-d with even greater joy.

According to the first explanation there would not be any problem with applauding. However, in deference to the second reasoning, people refrain from clapping if it is not associated with a mitzvah.

Shabbat Shalom and Chag Sameach!
