Shabbat - Keeping it together

The concept is simple: Jews of all walks of life, from across the spectrum – religious, secular and traditional; young and old, from all corners of the world – uniting to experience one full Shabbat together, in full accordance with Jewish law.

The Shabbat Project was introduced in South Africa in 2013 to quite astonishing effect. On the Shabbat over which it ran, close to 70 percent of the country's 75,000 Jews kept Shabbat in full, most for the first time in their lives. Perhaps more significantly, the initiative drew people together in ways never seen before. In the aftermath, many wrote in from around the world, wanting to bring the initiative to their own cities and communities. And so, the international Shabbat Project was born.

It has already been described as "an experiment that has no precedent in modern Jewish history," and "the most ambitious Jewish unity initiative ever undertaken," with final preparations now feverishly underway coordinated by around 1500 partners in 340 cities.

"The Shabbat Project is an opportunity for the entire Jewish world to keep one complete Shabbat together – from Friday evening just before sunset on October 24, until Saturday night after the stars have come out on October 25," says South African Chief Rabbi Dr. Warren Goldstein, who originated the Shabbat Project last year in South Africa, and whose ideas and vision have enabled the project to go global in 2014. "The beauty of this is that it is so practical and manageable. It's only one Shabbat. It's something everyone can do."

In unprecedented fashion, Nobel Prize winners, writers, politicians, sportsmen, musicians and celebrities have joined revered rabbis and rosh yeshivas in lending their support and voicing their commitment to the cause. Hong Kong and Tokyo are "keeping it together", as are Lima and Manila, Addis Ababa and Abuja, and Vilna and Venice and even Southend-on-Sea! They are joined by around 50 cities in Israel, over 100 cities in the US, and more than 340 cities in 35 countries around the world.

Welcome to the Shabbat Project! Welcome to ShabbatUK in Southend-on-Sea!

Shabbat Shalom!
Rabbi Binyamin Bar
